Where are container door hinges located?

Mounted on the outer edge of the container door, these are the most widely used hinges in standard shipping containers. Installed on the inside of the container door frame, these hinges are concealed when the door is closed.

What size are shipping container hinges?

Standard shipping container hinges are designed to match the structural dimensions and weight of the doors they support. The most common size is: 12 inches (305 mm) in length and 3 inches (76 mm) in width, typically used on 20-foot and 40-foot ISO containers.

Which shipping containers are compatible with ISO hinges?

These hinges are standardized to fit most ISO shipping containers, including 20ft, 40ft, and high-cube variants. They are compatible with various container types such as dry cargo, refrigerated (reefer), open-top, and specialized units like offices or modular homes converted from containers.

What is a carbon steel hinge?

Carbon steel hinges are often galvanized (coated with zinc) to prevent rust and corrosion, making them ideal for outdoor and marine environments. They are best suited for standard shipping containers exposed to moderate weather conditions.
